If the trojan is already running, follow these steps: Ford (1932 film) Ralph Ford is a 1932 American pre-Code crime film directed by Alan Crosland and starring William Boyd, Margaret Sullivan, Alan Reed, and Theodore Kosloff. It was remade as a 1939 film of the same name with Alan Reed repeating his role. Plot A typical blind date gone bad causes the death of a pretty socialite and her husband. The victim is a wealthy socialite whose name is hidden by a fictitious one, "Jane", and her identical brother, Ralph, who has also taken this name. When two sleuths named Harrison and Guthrie try to establish the real identity of the dead woman, they discover a murder has been committed and begin their own investigation. Ralph Ford and his wife, whose real name is Della, the blind girl's sister, who are always in trouble at the same time, are involved. Mrs. Ford has been hired to pose as Jane to a reporter, who wants to know if her rich girlfriend has anything to say about her husband's death. The pair form an attachment, which is clearly not sanctioned by Della's fiance, who has been playing the field. The couple struggle to win over Harrison and Guthrie to the old story-telling method of double-crossing a person to get to know him better. Della is an unassuming woman, who cries when she tries to confess her sins to them. She can't understand their desire for money when they seem to want to help her. She takes them to the house of the man who really killed her sister, so they can find out the guilty party.
