The psychopathology of working-class women. In a year-long ethnographic study, the author examined the psychopathology of working-class women from a variety of ethnic groups in the northeastern United States. The psychological profiles of the women indicate that the psychiatric profession is failing to correctly identify and treat a large number of cases of what is usually classified as "depression." Based on results of the study, the author recommends that the psychiatric profession reject the current taxonomic system of classifying depression, develop a more comprehensive approach to the study of all kinds of depression, and change the cultural context in which depression is diagnosed and treated.

September 9, 2006 and was released in the United States on November 8, 2006. Plot An aspiring novelist, Megan Avery (Renee Zellweger) is engaged to a college English professor named Caleb Morrow (John Corbett), but she can't stop herself from loving a scriptwriter named Nick (Jason Biggs) from her hometown of Drexel, Pennsylvania. Nick visits Megan at her parents' home in Philadelphia, taking a picture of her mother and asking for her to give it to Caleb. Caleb does not want to know about Nick, but Megan is determined to show Caleb that Nick is the one. She tells Nick, who says his plane is running late and that he can't stay. Caleb tells Megan that he doesn't want a ring. Megan buys a ring, and on the day of their wedding, Nick catches up with her, successfully stealing the ring. Megan goes to New York, and at a rehearsal for the play, she runs
